

Project Management Board Accused in Can Tho Bridge Collapse

24 Oct 2007 - Investigators have concluded that the Project Management Board is responsible for the collapse of the Can Tho Bridge.

The board was assigned by the Ministry of Transportation to represent the interests of investors; however, by not monitoring the contractors and supervising consultants' work (which led to several serious mistakes in the construction process), they didn't fulfill their duty.

Additionally, the supervising consultants didn't participate in the scaffolding inspections, and were not even aware if the contractors had ever retested the insufficient support system or not.

It was their irresponsible attitude which caused the accident, and brought tragedy to so many people.
